

Global Energy Balance and Imbalance

R. Cahalan (1), N. Loeb (2), P. Pilewskie (3), G. Kopp (3), and J. Kiehl (4)

(1) NASA/Goddard Space Flight Center, Climate & Radiation Branch, Greenbelt, United States (robert.f.cahalan@nasa.gov, +1 301 614-5493), (2) NASA/Langley Research Center, Hampton, VA, United States, (3) University of Colorado/LASP, Boulder, CO, United States, (4) National Center for Atmospheric Research, Boulder, CO, United States

We review recent estimates of Earth's global energy balance at top-of-atmosphere and surface. Recent observations from SORCE and CERES are compared with earlier observations and with model simulations. Observational uncertainties and natural variability are considered. Special attention is given to new estimates of the global net absorbed radiation associated with planetary heating, and global warming.