

Global warming and extreme storm surges

Aslak Grinsted (1)

(1) University of Copenhagen, Niels Bohr Institute, Centre for Ice and Climate, Copenhagen Ø, Denmark (ag@glaciology.net), (2) College of Global Change and Earth System Science, Beijing Normal University, Beijing, China

I will show empirical evidence for how global warming has changed extreme storm surge statistics for different regions in the world. Are there any detectable changes beyond what we expect from sea level rise. What does this suggest about the future of hurricane surges such as from hurricane Katrina and superstorm Sandy?