

Juno's first peek at Jupiter's interior

Tristan Guillot (1), Yamila Miguel (1), William B. Hubbard (2), Yohai Kaspi (3), Daniel Reese (4), Ravit Helled (5), Eli Galanti (3), Burkhard Militzer (6), Sean Wahl (6), William M. Folkner (7), John Anderson (8), Luciano Iess (9), Daniele Durante (9), Marzia Parisi (7), and David J. Stevenson (10)

(1) Université Cote d'Azur, OCA, CNRS (Tristan.Guillot@oca.eu), (2) LPL, (3) Weizmann institute, (4) Observatoire de Paris, LESIA, CNRS, (5) University of Zurich, (6) Berkeley University, (7) JPL, (8) Southwest Research Institute, (9) Università La Sapienza, (10) Caltech

The first orbits of Juno around Jupiter have led to a considerable improvement in the measurement of the planet's even gravitational moments. We will discuss how this leads to better constraints on jovian interior models, and how internal differential rotation and equations of state play an important part in the analysis.