For a national society such as the Société météorologique de France, creating an on-line version for its long-established journal « La Météorologie » was not such a straight forward enterprise. The benefit of investigating the idea was quickly agreed and a group set up to do it. We will present here the many questions that had to be decided, from technical to financial. Bringing together expertise from the publishing side with librarians has been a key element. We will highlight how and why, and present the innovative work share between the two that we implemented.
