

Good practises in deriving and communicating information on regional climate change

F. Kreienkamp (1), A. Spekat (1), H. Huebener (2), and C. Linke (3)

(1) Climate and Environment Consulting Potsdam GmbH, Potsdam, Germany (frank.kreienkamp@cec-potsdam.de), (2) Hessian Agency for Environment and Geology, Hessian Centre on Climate Change, Wiesbaden, Germany, (3) Environment Agency Brandenburg, Potsdam, Germany

Over the last few years there has been a growing degree of awareness for the fact that scientists and decision makers need to explore sources of potential misunderstandings. This includes regional climate projections which form the basis for the implementation of adaption and mitigation measures. A structured approach to devise a framework of recommendations and good practises will be presented. It includes essential information on climate projections as well as recommendations concerning linguistics, communication and graphical design.