

Fostering collaborations to support climate services

Catherine Vaughan and Stephen Zebiak

Columbia University, International Research Institute for Climate & Society, Palisades, NY, United States
(cv2195@columbia.edu)

An informal, interdisciplinary network designed to promote the development and delivery of climate services around the world, the Climate Services Partnership is now in its third year. As part of its mission, the CSP has fostered a range of collaborations integral to the development of climate services at national and regional scales; this presentation will reflect on these activities, offering perspective on successful models for the range of partnerships that are needed to meet growing demand for timely, tailored climate information for decision making. The talk will specifically address regional- and sector-focused collaborations, private-sector engagement, and the creation of interdisciplinary working groups.