

A career path with diversions

Barbara Früh
DWD, Germany

During my school education I had no clear career plan for remote future. That is why my way to my current position was not a straight one. So I started my studies late. My scientific education was a mixture of conscious decisions for the next steps and taking things as they come not being conscious about the decision which should have been taken. Now I am working at a National Meteorological Service heading a small working group. To a very large part I really like my work.