

How storm naming improves communication to general public

Gerald Fleming

Met Eireann, Ireland (gfleming@eircom.net)

In 2015 the National Met Services of the UK and Ireland introduced a joint "storm-naming" scheme for windstorms that were expected to affect either of the islands of Ireland or Britain. This talk will examine the thinking that led to this decision, and will reflect of the experience through the first winter of operation, and how the naming scheme promoted better communication and awareness among the general public.
