

Creating an open and decentralized pool of peer reviewer resources using P2P

Nate Jacobs
UCLA

Legacy publishers have effectively slowed an ongoing transition away from traditional and more lucrative publishing workflows by protecting two major assets - valuation (i.e. brand association with “prestige”) and evaluation (i.e. coordinating peer review processes) of scholarly content. Both of these assets will need to be democratized before mass transition to alternative publishing workflows can occur.